THE EXILE.

Wanderer, Pilgrim, or whate'er thou be,
Traveller through this weary world with me,
Receiving all rich bounties from above,
Or pining 'neath distresses sent in love,
Reflect with me, while thus I here relate
Of one who had through life a chequered fate.
But, sure, the task I wish to undertake,
For me is far too noble and too great;
Yet I will hope, and trust to be forgiven,
Like men of old, who tried to build to heaven.
My hero is a youth of noble birth,
Endowed with mind and heart of solid worth;
