Introduction

There are some things so true that no amount of proof can make them more true; yet to those who do not follow the higher forms of thinking, it becomes impossible to explain or verify them. But in spite of the skeptical mind and the scoff of the scorner, the old things must pass away and new things, born from new ideas, must come forth.

These are the days of new thoughts, new statements and new actions, and all these new things rest upon the deeper intellectual and spiritual insight of the race.

The first really new freedom of thought was directed toward the material universe, seeking a fuller and more harmonious self-expression in form.

The old civilization consciousness passed through the revelation of matter, then on to mind, while the New Civilization of today is passing back again through labyrinths of mind to astounding discoveries in matter.

The first really new discovery in mind was directed toward a finer understanding of the physical body and strange new psychological relationships of health and disease were discovered.
