PREFACE.

HE following pages will sufficiently explain the manner and order of their suggestion. Their object will be abundantly attained if therein may be found a word in season for him that is weary ; or if some interwoven thread of promise may by them be brought home to any heart with the fresh force of personal application.

The chronicles of our lives are two-fold : that outer record of words and deeds which lies open before the world ; and that other which contains the secret history of an inner life, written in a cipher whereof God and the soul, only, possess the key.
