WHETHER to keep the memories of foreign lands vivid and recall them pleasantly by the fireside in after days, or to pass profitably what may be called the leisure hours of travel, it is a task not less interesting than useful to keep a diary ; and in these days of rapid locomotion, when a voyage round the world is thought as little of as a Continental tour, the traveller may be interested in perusing for his guidance these notes of the chief landmarks in a journey of 30,000 miles. That this little book may serve as a better indication of how the varying time passed, the writer has set down each day in order, and numbers of facts and incidents have been given which might otherwise appear trivial. For the rest he dismisses it with the sincere hope that it may give pleasure to any of his friends who happens to glance over it.
