THIS monograph was read before the Medico-legal Society of the City of New York, for the purpose of demonstrating the necessity of a change in the manner of conducting criminal investigations and in the introduction of expert testimony. As it is necessary in every argument to lay a foundation or basis for its support, and having selected the Stokes case as the most apt illustration of it, I was obliged to describe: the medical history of the case of the late James Fisk, Jr.; the nature of shock, and of gunshot wounds of the abdomen; and the physiological and toxic actions of morphine. Believing that the facts I have collected, and the views advanced, may be of interest, and possibly possess some value, I have rearranged the matter and divided it into five chapters, viz.: I. The history of the case of James Fisk, Jr. II. Description of shock. III. Penetrating gunshot wounds of the abdomen. IV. The physiological and toxic actions of morphine. V. The medical jurisprudence of the Stokes case.
