The Scotsman.

Unusually lucid and sanely reasoned. . . . A notable attempt to solve the mystery of the lost Ten Tribes of Israel.

The Life of Faith.

Not every advocate of the Anglo-Israel theory knows how to present his case with the clearness and evident conviction that characterize Mr. Llewellyn Thomas's book. Even those who do not accept the views enunciated will be ready to acknowledge, after perusing this volume, that there is certainly something to be said in favour of the application of promises made to Israel to the Anglo-Saxon race, and the work is extremely suggestive, even if not absolutely convincing.

The Christian.

Whilst by no means endorsing the whole of Mr. Llewellyn Thomas's deductions and conclusions, we can yet cordially commend his book as an enthusiastic, sane and reverent presentation of the Anglo-Israel theory.

The Methodist Times.

. . . The Argument is traced through the Scriptures with thoroughness and skill, but without anything that is forced or fantastic. . . . The book leaves us with altogether a fuller and firmer faith in God as the Ruler of the world—the Over-ruler—working out through all the ages the great promises made to our fathers.

The Church Family Newspaper.

. . . The presentation of the subject is good, being on a Scriptural basis. . . . The studies are reverent, without fanciful or fantastic interpretations. . . . We recommend this work and wish it a wide circulation.

The Banner of Israel.

. . . A thoughtful and well worked out contribution to the already growing mass of British-Israel literature. . . . The book is simply written and as clearly developed.
