From a Prisoner in the King's Bench to the Editor of the Morning Herald.

SIR,

The accuracy of your report of the very remarkable transactions in the King's Bench Prison has led me to send the following observations on some most unfeeling and revoltingly inhuman remarks on the same subject in a Morning Paper of this day. If the humane feelings of that writer had been equal to his command of language, he certainly would not have taken so very erroneous a view of the subject.

In the first place, let it be noticed that this peculiar pastime has been frequently repeated in this place, and has never until now been interrupted; by what means then could the pre-
