PREFACE.

ON the 8th day of June, less than one month ago—died, in the fullness of his years and honours, the great citizen and soldier, ANDREW JACKSON.

It will be for the men of another age to pass a calm and enduring judgment upon the influence of his remarkable career upon the character and destinies of the nation. But as a military commander of the most splendid abilities; as a statesman who has occupied the highest place in the gift of the people, with a courage and strength of intellect which have made his name familiar through the world; as a brave, patriotic and high-souled AMERICAN; he is even now contemplated by the men of every opinion and party.

He lived a hero, and died a Christian. He is gone from a world where he was recognised as among the greatest of men, to an immortal companionship with the greatest and purest of all the ages.

We have, in this little volume, sketched his history with carefulness and candour, and present the record to our young countrymen, to be placed with that of the life of our Washington, among the models to be imitated by all who would attain a similar elevation in the world.

Philadelphia, July 4, 1845.
