MANY CARGOES

Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

"I have just been reading Many Cargoes, by Mr. W. W. Jacobs, which has made me laugh much and often. It is a collection of short stories, reprinted from various periodicals, and dealing with men who go down to the sea in ships of moderate tonnage; stories told with such fresh and unforced fun that their drollery is perfectly irresistible. I have never heard of Mr. W. W. Jacobs before, and for anything I know this may be his first literary voyage, but I can only say that the sooner he puts to sea again and brings back more cargoes of the same goods the better I shall be pleased."—Punch.

"When a bachelor with a healthy appetite takes up a book in the club reading-room, after a hard day's work, and suddenly discovers that it is ten o'clock, that he has forgotten all about his dinner, and that he is too sore in the ribs to enjoy it, one may fairly argue that the book has merits of a peculiar order. A similar conclusion may be drawn from the confession of an ardent golfer in the course of a railway journey to a favourite Surrey green, that if he read any more of the same book it would 'put him off his stroke.' For the authenticity of these two incidents the present reviewer is prepared to vouch, and hastens, for the benefit of all those who have not made the acquaintance of the volume in question, to state that its name is Many Cargoes, a collection of short stories of seafaring life by W. W. Jacobs, an author who, to judge from his first essay, is as richly equipped with the sense of the ludicrous as any writer now before the public."—Spectator.
