INDIA AND THE WAR

IMPERIAL SERVICE TROOPS

A group representative of the Imperial Service Troops maintained by the feudatory Princes of India, and including men of many of the races and tribes already touched upon in these notes. These troops are held at the disposal of the King-Emperor in case of need, and, when called upon, take their place with the British-Indian Army. The total of this force is very considerable, aggregating approximately fifteen regiments of cavalry and twelve battalions of infantry, to which must be added mountain batteries, some companies of sappers, and valuable transport corps (both mule and camel). The Imperial Service Troops thus form not only a notable and splendid testimony to the loyalty of the feudatory Princes and peoples, but also a fighting force of great value.
