THE

ATLANTIS:

A HALF-YEARLY REGISTER OF LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

Conducted by Members of the Catholic University of Ireland.

THE object of the work, which these lines are intended to introduce to the public, is to serve principally as the repository and memorial of such investigations in Literature and Science, as are made by the members of the new Catholic University of Ireland. It is natural that men, whose occupations are of an intellectual nature, should be led to record the speculations or the conclusions in which their labours have issued; and that, having taken this step, they should consider it even as a duty which they owe to society, to communicate to others what they have thought it worth while to record. A periodical publication is the obvious mode of fulfilling that duty.

The prospects of their work are to be determined by its object and character. They cannot hope to interest the general reader; but from this very circumstance they are happily precluded from the chance of competition with those various ably-conducted periodicals which already possess the popular favour. They do not aspire to include Theology, as such, among the subjects to which their pages are to be devoted; but here again they have the compensation, that they will not be running the risk, in anything they publish, of provoking that most serious of all rivalries, which is founded on a principle of duty. Thus they hope to take their place among such writers as are absolutely unable to stand in each other's way, because they are all employed upon a field where there is room for all, and supply a market which cannot be overstocked, in which no one's loss is another's gain, but the success of each is the benefit of all.

Accordingly, instead of fearing rivals in those who are engaged in similar pursuits, the Conductors of the Atlantis are secure of friends. In undertakings such as theirs, success, from the nature of the case, is another name for merit; and failure can only arise from causes traceable to themselves. If they are sanguine that they shall be able to answer to the profession which they make in the very fact of their commencing, it is because they trust they have the elementary qualifications of zeal, industry, and determination.

The work will be published half-yearly, on the first of January and the first of July. Each number will be divided into three portions, devoted respectively to Literature, Science, and Notices, Literary or Scientific, the number of pages in each portion varying with the number.

The first number will appear on January 1, 1858.
