PREFACE.

Y endeavour in the following pages has been to collect together from the Gospels a large number of the varied forms of sin which they contain, and to arrange them as subjects for Scripture Reading, Meditation, and Self-Examination.

When I have been engaged in parochial duties, and have had occasion to speak of sin, I have often felt the want of some collection of sins such as I have now made; and, I trust, my humble efforts may prove useful to others as well as to myself.

The questions, and the philosophical parts are intended merely to be suggestive, and taken, as very many of them are, from a large number of standard authors, may supply thoughts for several grades of mind: some of them will be found so
