ACEON:

A TALE OF THE SOUL'S EXPERIENCES.

CANTO I.

THE POET.

ONCE, in the past, long centuries ago,
A poet lived, and charmed the souls of men,
With his immortal song, so wild and free,
Soaring to heights by mortal feet untrod,
Revealing truth and beauty everywhere.
How he was known on earth, I cannot tell,
But his soul's name was Aceon the Fair.
His form was beautiful to look upon,
Graceful and light, erect and dignified.
Through his dark locks, a flash of amber gold
Gleamed in the sunshine. And the light of truth
Illumined all his visage, shining clear
Through those deep orbs of his. A gleam of pride
Flashed in his glance, the pride of fearless youth.
Until he sang, his blushing lips were pressed
In a sweet, haughty smile, that e'er defied
