Preface

WITH the two essays that comprise the first part of this book and that have given the book its title, the first dealing with the nature and genesis of progressive leadership and the second with recent opportunities, I have ventured to associate two essays on closely related themes. Certainly no study of leadership and progress in these times can properly neglect either the problem of the modern newspaper, so indicative of the prevailing mentality, or the problem of leisure. On a people's leisure depends so surely the success with which any opportunities are met.

Of the two essays on Leadership and Progress the first has already been published in The International Journal of Ethics, Vol. XXXII, No. 2. Also, the essay on The Newspaper Conscience was published in The American Journal of Sociology, Vol. XXVII, No. 2, and that on the Ages of Leisure in the same journal, Vol. XXVIII, No. 2. For permission to make use of these essays here I wish to thank the editors of the two journals.
