CHAPTER I

THE odds against John M'Gummidge's winning the Golf Medal were, according to the Professor of Mathematics, "humanly speaking, incalculable." M'Gummidge was a Freshman : he was long, lathy, ungainly, and wore spectacles. Never had he been seen on the Links, not even taking solitary exercise with a short spoon. His only companion, a singular figure, was a student from Northern Hindustan. The Bobhachy Lal Rumun deserves a more particular description. The snows of an unknown number of winters flowed over the collar of his gown,
