PREFACE.

THIS little book is designed to accompany Raub's New Normal Readers. It contains the words found in those Readers, given in the order in which those words first occur in the series.

The diacritical marks used are those of Webster's International Dictionary.

Italics are used throughout the book to indicate silent letters.

Both italics and diacritical marks are used throughout the First Reader and the Second Reader to indicate the pronunciation; throughout the remaining lessons these marks are used chiefly in the accented syllables only.

A few supplementary lists of words pronounced similarly but spelled differently are given at the close of the lessons from the respective readers. Practice on these may be given in sentence construction in such a way as to prove both interesting and instructive.

In general, sentence construction, embracing the words given, may be made a valuable language exercise.
