PREFACE.

THESE pages are intended chiefly for the young, whose minds are sufficiently mature to understand their relations to God and eternity, and to feel the force of moral obligation. My aim in them has been to enlighten the understanding, to reach the conscience and the heart, and win the soul to God in the early period of its probationary existence. The subject is one of great moment, and should be kept distinctly before the reader's mind, while perusing this book. If impenitent, he should feel himself personally addressed, and allow the truths here presented to have their legitimate influence upon his understanding and heart. Each chapter should be read with close attention, deep seriousness, and with a spirit of fervent prayer.

Although this book is designed particularly for the young, it may be read with equal profit by those whose age and experience afford an additional reason why they should enter immediately upon a religious life.
