PREFACE

As a member of a seminar in Education working for some time under the direction of Professor Yocum at the University of Pennsylvania in the particular field of research treated in this monograph the writer was much impressed with the need of a brief treatise clearly setting forth, in lieu of a series of introductory lectures, some of the objects which might be pursued and some of the methods which might be followed by similar groups of collaborating scientists in the field of educational methods.

It is hoped that this specific purpose may be served by Professor Yocum's brief introduction to this study and by my own more fully-developed outlines.

The complete manuscripts of my more extended study in this field will hereafter be available to students in the library of the School of Education at the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia.
