TO THE READER.

The Editor takes the liberty to apologize to his readers that, in consequence of severe indisposition, he was unable to devote the necessary attention to the correction of the press, and hopes they will also excuse him for having deviated from the orthography that is of late admitted to be the standard. In being of the old school, and not in the practice of rendering the language for many years, occasioned this defect. In this he may be partly right and partly wrong in not using the labial pronunciation in place of the dental and guttural, which is more natural and emphatic to gravity a Celts ear, and in unison with the true sound of pronouncing the language.
