ORVILLE H. LEONARD

THE LAND WHERE THE SUNSETS GO: SKETCHES OF THE AMERICAN DESERT

When a desert man drifts into a strange town he takes no letters of introduction and there's no one to vouch for him. Over his after-dinner cigareet in the Mesa Hotel office, he drops a casual remark as to the trail by which he entered town and the name of the last town he left, and the ice begins to melt. Mutual friends are discovered, reminiscences follow, and he is identified.

Howdy, Stranger! I come from the town o' Golden Spur, on the edge of that Desert over yonder.
