THE HOMES OF TENNYSON

ALDWORTH

Tennyson loved the autumn on Blackdown, so I was the more pleased to make this drawing of his stately Sussex home when the Virginia creeper was in its full autumn glory.

The house was not so richly covered with creepers when I was first invited to stay there in the autumn of 1876, but the great view of the Weald of Sussex remains the same as ever it was--'Green Sussex fading into blue.'

NOTE

THIS sketch of the Homes of Tennyson has been written from a personal, rather than a biographical, standpoint, and the thanks of the author are due to the friends and relatives of the Poet for much valuable information concerning his life.

Among the books of reference consulted especial mention should be made of the Memoir of Alfred Tennyson, by his son. This book, encyclopædic in its completeness, and an authority beyond dispute in matters of fact concerning the Poet's life, has been freely quoted in the present work.
