PREFACE

OWING to the unusual interest now taken in Russian military matters, I have been induced to write the following account of the Russian Army from within. This little work does not profess to be of a technical nature, but is simply an account of the Russian commanders and soldiers and the impression they made upon me during the twenty-seven years I resided in various parts of the Empire, more especially in Cronstadt, Finland, Petrograd, Krasno Selo, Little Russia and the Caucasus.
