INTRODUCTION.

THE progress of the Church in the United States depends upon its adequacy to sustain the faith and hope and engage the affections of the American people. It is a question of dealing with the difficulties, not only of individuals here and there, but also of great classes of the people: of the intellectual and cultivated, of the rich and prosperous, of the poor and wretched, of the farmer and the merchant, the artisan and the laborer, the shop-girl and the domestic servant. Believing in the divine origin and the divine guidance of the Catholic Church, churchmen feel a calm trust in her capacity in this land to accomplish her divine mission; and for the
