INTRODUCTION.

THE following Chapters on some points of Everyday Life have been written with the hope that they may fall into the hands of those whose stations in life, with their wants, trials, and mercies, they are intended to describe.

Some works seem only written for the amusement of the moment; directly the tale is finished there is an end of the book, and it may be put on the shelf and forgotten: other books seek to combine instruction with interesting narrative, and the lessons taught are of such perpetual application, that the books may be read and re-read with pleasure and profit.

These Chapters, it is hoped, will convey social and religious lessons, not in a dry, sermonizing style, but in an easy and cheerful dress, clothed with just so much of the every-day incidents of life as may make them at once acceptable and useful to the reader.

January 1858.
