some day bear such very abundant fruit. Dr. Chaplin's diligence in delving is only equalled by the readiness and kindness with which he places the result of his labours at the disposal of his fellow-workers in the same field. It was he who persuaded me that this booklet—a relaxation from a more important work—was worth publishing at all, who procured several scarce documents for it and who made various useful and interesting 'finds'; the luckiest of all, perhaps, being the portrait of Dr. Burton.
