

Published @ 2017 Trieste Publishing Pty Ltd

ISBN 9780649731855

The Way to Win by William Le Queux

Except for use in any review, the reproduction or utilisation of this work in whole or in part in any form by any electronic, mechanical or other means, now known or hereafter invented, including xerography, photocopying and recording, or in any information storage or retrieval system, is forbidden without the permission of the publisher, Trieste Publishing Pty Ltd, PO Box 1576 Collingwood, Victoria 3066 Australia.

All rights reserved.

Edited by Trieste Publishing Pty Ltd. Cover @ 2017

This book is sold subject to the condition that it shall not, by way of trade or otherwise, be lent, re-sold, hired out, or otherwise circulated without the publisher's prior consent in any form or binding or cover other than that in which it is published and without a similar condition including this condition being imposed on the subsequent purchaser.

www.triestepublishing.com

WILLIAM LE QUEUX

THE WAY TO WIN

Trieste

THE WAY TO WIN

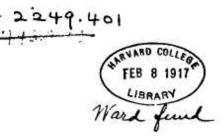

BY

WILLIAM LE QUEUX

AUTHOR OF "GERMAN SPIES IN ENGLAND," "THE INVASION," ETC., ETC.

LONDON: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & CO., LTD.

٠

NEW WAR BOOKS

ł

BY

WILLIAM LE QUEUX

The Man who, in The Daily Mail, foretold the War in 1906

POLITICAL CRITICISMS

German Spies in England Britain's Deadly Peril The Devil's Spawn

NOVELS

THE ZEPPELIN DESTROYER "No. 70 BERLIN"

THE SPY HUNTER

THE GREEN RAY

Copyright in the United States of America by William Le Queux, 1916

CONTEN	TS

FOREWORD

.

12

19

C

PAGE

CHAPTER I

CIALL LINE I
THE RIFT IN THE CLOUDS .	1.0	2 8	20	9
CHAPTER II
OUR INVINCIBLE NAVY .	•	8	•	24
CHAPTER III
THE COMING VICTORY ON LAND		×	•	4I
CHAPTER IV
OUR MASTERY OF THE AIR .	(1)		•	57
CHAPTER V
BRITAIN'S UNSHAKABLE RESOLVE	•		•	73
CHAPTER VI
THE TERROR IN GERMANY .	S 9 5	a.	82	84
CHAPTER VII
GERMANY'S BANKRUPT FUTURE	9 1 3	×	e	99

6	CO	NT	ENTS
	CHAP	TE	r vi	п		PAGE
THE INVISIBLE	HAND	3				. 114
	CHA	PTI	ER IX	2
COMPULSORY	SERVICE BRITAIN'S			in's	MASTER-
STROKE .		•	3			. 130
	CHA	PT	ER X
Germany's Co	LOSSAL]	BLU	NDER	5.		. 145
	CHAI	PTE	ER X	I
VICTORY WITH	HONOUI	R			61 5	. 164
	CHAI	TE	R XI	I
" NEVER AGAI	N "				3	· 177

А.

ł.

FOREWORD

- I do not think anyone who has studied the progress of the War with care and patience can deny that, during the past few months, a mighty change has come over the aspect of the great struggle.
- A year ago, when I wrote "Britain's Deadly Peril," the fortunes of the Allies appeared to be at the lowest ebb. Indomitable energy and perseverance have since worked wonders. To-day we plainly see that the conquering march of the Teuton has been arrested and the process of forcing back his hordes has begun.
- Britain—the fierce Lion of Britain—is at last fully aroused to the momentous issues which hang on the decision, and has flung herself with all her unrivalled tenacity, and with a unanimity unparalleled in our history, into the titanic conflict.
- Russia, France, and Italy have responded to the call with equal nobility. To-day the Allies are more than a match for the Hun in manpower; they are equal to them, at least, in the supply of munitions, the lack of which so badly hampered our cause last year. Finally, the great new masses of the British Army, straining at the leash, are eagerly awaiting the signal to hurl themselves at the foe for his destruction.
- The British Navy, silent and invincible, holds the seas of all the world, and Germany and her Allies are to-day feeling the pinch of war in most deadly earnest. Prices in enemy countries are rising by leaps and bounds; the food supply is beginning to fail; money is lacking; the value of the mark is falling, and there is every prospect of a shortage of men—cannon-fodder they were once called by Germans—in the near future. We are on the eve of great events.

Already we hear the ominous rumblings which prelude the breaking of the storm. The great clash is at hand which, for good or ill, shall settle the destinies of our world for many generations to come—perhaps for ever.

- Can we doubt the issue? Assuredly not. The spirit of our dear old Britain and her glorious Allies is unbroken, and still unbreakable. Cost what it may, they are fully determined to smash, once and for ever, the accursed Teuton attempt to dominate the world and throw back the clock of civilisation for centuries. There will be no faltering and no turning back on Great Britain's part until that great end is attained.
- Courage and resolution and a hard fist are the keys of the situation for the Allies. We have them in abundant measure. And unless Britain is unthinkably false to all the traditions that have made her great, our triumph in the Near To-morrow is assured.

WILLIAM LE QUEUX.

Devonshire Club, London, March, 1916.

THE WAY TO WIN

CHAPTER I

THE RIFT IN THE CLOUDS

IF we could imagine a being from another planet dropped suddenly on this old earth of ours and left with the aid of maps to figure out for himself the real position of the world-war, we could readily imagine that it would seem to him that the Germans were winning "hands down."

Perhaps there would be a good deal of excuse for such a belief.

He would see, in the first place, that the Germans had overrun and captured the whole of Belgium except one very small portion. He would see that the greater part of Northern France was in their undisputed possession. He would see that they had driven the Russians from Poland and penetrated far within the boundaries of Russia proper.

He would also see that they had almost completely conquered or cajoled the Balkan States, and that German trains were running from the North Sea to