STATIONERS'-HALL COURT,
1863.

ADVERTISEMENT TO THE LONDON EDITION.

---

THE known talents of Professor JACOBS as a scholar, and the high rank he holds as a critic, will not only be a sufficient apology for the appearance of the following work in this country, but also its best recommendation.

It is neither our wish nor intention to draw any invidious comparison between the book with which we now present the British public, and any other book of a similar kind, which may, at this time, be in general or partial use: on the contrary, we are desirous that every production, deserving of estimation, should have due consideration and encouragement. We, therefore, add the LATIN READER to our list of school books, chiefly in the hope of affording more ample scope for choice, to gentlemen engaged in educating the young, and of conferring a very acceptable service on the young themselves, by furnishing them with a much admired compilation of classical beauties, selected with great learning and taste, fraught with most useful instruction, engagingly and agreeably conveyed, peculiarly adapted to the capacity of youth, and perfectly free from every thing contaminating to the morals.

THE WORK CONTAINS

	PAGE
Exercises in the Declensions of Nouns.....	v
————— Conjugations of Verbs.....	vi
————— Single sentences.....	1
————— Compound sentences.....	5
The best of Æsop's Fables.....	10
Sentences descriptive of Ancient Mythology.....	23
Anecdotes of Eminent Persons.....	31
Outlines of Roman History.....	42
Ancient Geography and the Nations of Antiquity.....	68
A Clavis, superseding the necessity of a Dictionary.....	91
A list of Abbreviations of Roman Names.....	134

Thus have we briefly enumerated the contents of this little work; and we doubt not but many grown persons, renewing their acquaintance with the Latin language, will, as well as the youth of both sexes, find in it a truly valuable acquisition.
