The Penalties of Taste and Other Essays

The essay which gives the title to this exceedingly readable little volume is followed by five others, respectively entitled: "Two Kinds of Conscience," "Bashfulness," "The Nerves of the Modern Child," "Some Lessons of Heredity," and "Our Poorly Educated Educators."

Dr. Bridge is a physician of wide practical observation and experience, and his treatment of these themes is of the most catholic kind. His plan is generous and kind, and his style is simple, direct, agreeable—even chatty. The reader can give a fair guess at the scope and significance of the treatment from the very names of the essays. The two that seem to us to possess especial value are "The Nerves of the Modern Child," and "Some Lessons of Heredity." These are of prime importance and are treated in a rather striking way. A layman might have written the others, but not these. On the whole, it can be truthfully and cheerfully said of this volume that it is thoughtful, full of suggestions, and worthy of a wide reading.
