CONTENTS.

LECTURES ON DANIEL.

LECTURE I.

The importance, authenticity, and genuineness of the Book of Daniel.—The dream of Nebuchadnezzar.—The continuance of "the abomination of desolation" synchronous with the growth of the Kingdom of God. 1-25

LECTURE II.

Daniel's Fourth Kingdom is Rome. The vision of the Four Beasts of chapter vii.—The Beast with Ten Horns, the symbol of the divided Roman world.—The Little Horn of chapter vii the Imperial Head of the divided Roman world.—The Four Beasts of Daniel embodied in the First Beast of Revelation, chapter xiii.—The Image of the Beast of Revelation viii the representative of the Little Horn of Daniel, chapter vii.—The Beast of Daniel, the persecutor of the Jews.—The same Beast of Revelation xiii the persecutor of faithful Christians.—Historical proofs of the origin and continuance of Rome, and of the persecution of the Jews by the Roman Hierarchy 26-43

LECTURE III.

The vision of chapter viii seen in Elam.—Belshazzar's ignorance of Daniel accounted for.—The Ram of chapter viii the symbol of Medo-Persia.—The Goat, of the Macedonian Empire of Alexander the Great, divided among his Generals upon his death.—The Little Horn of chapter viii the symbol of Antiochus Epiphanes.—The marks which distinguish the Little Horn of chapter vii from that of chapter viii.—How far do these correspond with the persecuting Kings of the North of chapter xi?—Interpretation of the vision of chapters x, xi and xii 44-60

LECTURE IV.

The days of Daniel and St. John symbolise years.—They cannot tell us the time of the Second Advent.—They help us to harmonise the synchronous predictions.—They distinguish between the God-opposing Powers of chapters viii and vii.—Antiochus Epiphanes the Little Horn of chapter viii.—The Imperial Head of the Roman Hierarchy the Little Horn of chapter vii.—The seventy weeks of chapter ix date from the seventh year of Artaxerxes.—The seventieth week dates from the call of the Baptist, and in the midst of it our Lord was crucified. “He shall confirm the covenant with many for one week, and in the midst of the week He shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease” (Dan. ix, 27) 61-80

LECTURES ON THE REVELATION.

LECTURE I.

Blessings to be expected from the study of the Revelation.—Its date and authorship.—Difficulties caused by rashness of Commentators.—A simple and consistent interpretation attempted.—The book a dramatic Allegory.—A prophecy given by symbols.—The Rider on the White Horse the hero of the drama.—The symbol of Christ and His Church going forth “conquering and to conquer.”—The second Rider, the symbol of the Church and its Rulers armed with the sword of civil power.—The third Rider, the Church and its Rulers corrupted by avarice, selling its spiritual wares.—The fourth Rider, the Church and its Rulers still conquering, but more deeply corrupted, killing men’s bodies with the sword of civil power, and their souls with the famine of the word of God.—The fifth Seal exhibits the souls of the martyrs resting in Paradise.—The sixth Seal prefigures the Final Judgment, and the seventh symbolises the beginning of Eternal Rest 82-104

LECTURE II.

The seven Trumpets announce the Judgment attending the triumphant march of Christ and His Church.—The imagery suggested by the story of the fall of Jericho and the Plagues of Egypt.—Their symbolism will be intelligible when we know of what great City they predict the fall.—The great City is Roman Christendom.—Its origin, and its civil and ecclesiastical elements are symbolised in chapters xii, xiii, and xvii.—Prejudice either for or against Rome keeps men from understanding the Apocalypse.—The Church has more formidable enemies than Rome.—The symbol of chapter xv.—The Woman is the Church.—Her Son is Christ.—The Serpent is the Devil.—Genesis iii shows how Paradise was lost.—Revelation xii symbolises Paradise regained.

 —The form of the Red Serpent explained by reference to the Fourth Beast of Daniel.—The Ten-horned Beast is not the symbol of the Church of Rome, but of the World-power of all ages.—The escape of the Woman from the persecutions of the Serpent symbolises the deliverance of the Church by the conversion of Imperial Rome.—The waters issuing from the Serpent's mouth symbolise "the human deluge" of the Northern invaders of Rome.—The earth helps the Woman by absorbing the flood of waters.—This symbolises the Church's escape from destruction by the gradual settlement and conversion of the Northern hordes 105—125

LECTURE III.

Chapter xiii gives three symbols for the three elements of Roman Christendom from the age of Charles the Great: 1. The Ten-horned Beast to whom the Serpent surrenders his Throne and power—the Sovereigns of the divided Latin world; 2. A second Beast with the two Horns of the Lamb and the voice of the Serpent—the King Bishop of Rome, the Vicar of the Lamb, and the Spiritual Head of Christendom; 3. The Image of the former Beast—the revived Holy Roman Emperor, the Temporal Head of Christendom.—These symbolisms imply no wholesale condemnation of individuals, either as Kings or Bishops.—The second Beast is identified with the Papacy by eleven distinctive marks.—The prophecy condemns the abuse, not the use, of power; the system, not the individuals connected with it ... 126—144

LECTURE IV.

Chapters xvii, xviii and xix refer to the future.—Chapter xvii a vision of Judgment and of the punishment of the corrupt Church by the Worldly Powers who have hitherto supported her.—The period of the Woman's dwelling in the wilderness, of the treading under foot of the Holy City, of the testimony of the witnesses in her streets, and of the reign of the Ten-horned Beast or World-power—the supporter of the woman and persecutor of her fruitful children.—is 1260 days, forty-two months, or three years and a half, proving that these symbols refer to synchronous events.—The waters of chapter xvii, and the Euphrates of Chapter xvi symbolise the popular support long given to Babylon.—Her fall is the result of the great Apostasy, and of the attempt of the worldly powers to extinguish the light of Christianity.—The same powers which destroy Babylon also fight against the Lamb, and are conquered by Him at His Advent 145—165

LECTURE V.

Chapter xx accounts for the absence of the Serpent for a time from the drama; the period during which he carries on his warfare with the faithful by means of the World-power and the Rulers of the worldly Church—the Christian Sovereigns and the Bishop of Rome.—The vision predicts the long unquestioned dominion of the Church in the Roman world ending in the great Apostasy of Anti-Christ; and reveals the reign of the souls of the Saints with Christ in Paradise during the intermediate state.—The future kingdom of the Saints is not Milleanial but Eternal 166—184

LECTURE VI.

The prophecy embraces the whole period of time between the First and Second Advents.—Intended for the support of the persecuted Christian in all ages of the Church, whether under Pagan or Christian Rome, or at the time of Anti-Christ.—The last state of the Church will be one of open hostility to the world, as it was at the beginning.—Are we approaching that condition?—The seven Trumpets announce judgments upon the opponents or corruptors of the Church.—The vision of chapter xi is an episode explaining the symbol of the Holy City, and its connection with the judgment of the sixth Trumpet.—The Temple and Altar represent the elect of Israel; the Court of the Gentiles, the Gentile Saints; the Holy City itself, the Church, as a whole, under the power of Gentiles and worldly Rulers.—The two witnesses in sack-cloth are the faithful in every age, the lights of the Church, and the supporters of its light.—The Beast from the Abyss, who slays them, symbolises the final Anti-Christian development of the World-power who attempts the extinction of Christian truth. Closing reflections.—The safety of the individual believer, in spite of his surroundings.—Victory or death the watchword of the Christian soldier ... 185—207

PREFACE.

THE following Lectures were delivered with the hope that they would suggest to the general reader satisfactory answers to the objections commonly made to the genuineness and authenticity of the Book of Daniel, and would help him to understand his prophecies.

It is shown that these visions of the Hebrew Prophet refer chiefly, if not exclusively, to the future of Daniel's own people, the Jews; to their persecution, from the fourth century to the present day, by the rulers and people of Christendom; to the long continuance of their dispersion; to the desolation of Jerusalem during the ages of Gentile dominion; and to their final deliverance at the end of the dispersion, and when "the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled."

An attempt is made to explain and harmonize the enigmatical numbers of Daniel and St. John; and to show how impossible it is by means of them to conjecture within very many centuries the time of the Second Advent of the Son of Man.
