CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I. (INTRODUCTION.)

	PAGE
The distinction between the historical and moral proof of the divine origin of Christianity	1
The advantages possessed by the moral proof	2
The moral elements in the Gospels inconsistent with the theories of modern unbelievers	3
The assumption on which the argument is founded	4
The peculiar character of the contents of the New Testament	5
The Gospels contain in addition to the history a delineation of the greatest of characters	5
Also an elevated system of morality	7
A unity of conception underlies them	8
The same moral and spiritual aspects pervade the entire New Testament	9
Christianity is not only a moral revelation, but it creates a great spiritual power in the person of Jesus Christ	10
The unique character of this conception	11
The course of the argument	12

CHAPTER II.

Is man capable of discovering moral and spiritual truth independently of a revelation?—
Dangerous theories which have been propounded on this subject without regard to facts	15
Similarities of moral precepts do not involve an identity of principles	16
Illustrated by the Stoical philosophy	17
An addition to natural light and a greater spiritual power to enforce truth on the conscience desirable	18
Important moral truths discoverable by reason	19
The undue depreciation of reason damages the evidences of revealed religion	20

CHAPTER III.

The extent to which the moral teaching of Christianity has been anticipated by previous inquirers :—
The bearing of this on the argument	22
The inquiry must be confined to the times prior to the Advent	23
The extent to which philosophy recognised the great principles of morality	24
The points where its voice was indistinct	25
The causes of this indistinctness, and its results	26
The extent to which philosophy succeeded in elaborating a code of duties, and its defects	27
The extent to which it succeeded in analyzing the particular virtues	29
Its mode of making men virtuous	30

CHAPTER IV.

	PAGE
The testimony which philosophy renders to Christianity viewed in its negative aspect :—
Philosophy confessed the inadequacy of its motives to impel men to virtue	32
Its despair with respect to the masses of mankind	33
Its teaching addressed to the upper ten thousand	34
Its failure to create a missionary spirit	34
Its failure to deal with men as individuals	36
The inadequacy of the only moral force with which it was acquainted to reform mankind	37
The reason of this	39
Philosophy devoid of profound convictions	40
The philosopher's view of the masses the opposite to that entertained by Jesus Christ	41
The points of contrast and the inference derived from them	43

CHAPTER V.

The specialities which distinguish the teaching of Christianity from that of the ancient philosophers and moralists :—
1st Contrast. The completeness of its teaching	46
2nd " Its all-embracing character	47
3rd " Its practical character as distinguished from the speculative character of philosophy	50
4th " Its principles all true to universal morality.	52
5th " Their freedom from the one-sidedness of those of the ancient world.	53
6th " The elevation of the milder and unobtrusive virtues—The revolution in thought between ancient and modern conceptions	54
