BOOK I.

CONTAINING DIVERS INGENIOUS THEORIES AND PHILOSOPHIC SPECULATIONS, CONCERNING THE CREATION AND POPULATION OF THE WORLD, AS CONNECTED WITH THE HISTORY OF NEW-YORK.

CHAP. I.—Description of the world	1
CHAP. II.—Cosmogony, or creation of the world; with a multitude of excellent theories, by which the creation of a world is shown to be no such difficult matter as common folk would imagine	5
CHAP. III.—How that famous navigator Noah was shamefully nicknamed; and how he committed an unpardonable oversight in not having four sons—with the great trouble of philosophers caused thereby, and the discovery of America	12
CHAP. IV.—Showing the great difficulty philosophers have had in peopling America—and how the aborigines came to be begotten by accident—to the great relief and satisfaction of the author	16
CHAP. V.—In which the author puts a mighty question to the rout, by the assistance of the man in the moon—which not only delivers thousands of people from great embarrassment, but likewise concludes this introductory book	21

BOOK II.

TREATING OF THE FIRST SETTLEMENT OF THE PROVINCE OF NIEUW-NEDERLANDT.

CHAP. I.—In which are contained divers reasons why a man should not write in a hurry—also of Master Hendrick Hudson, his discovery of a strange country—and how he was magnificently rewarded by the munificence of their High Mightinesses	33
CHAP. II.—Containing an account of a mighty ark which floated, under the protection of St. Nicholas, from Holland to Gibbet Island—the descent of the strange animals therefrom—a great victory, and a description of the ancient village of Communi-paw	40

- CHAP. III.—In which is set forth the true art of making a bargain—together with the miraculous escape of a great metropolis in a fog—and the biography of certain heroes of Communipaw . . . Page 43
- CHAP. IV.—How the heroes of Communipaw voyaged to Hell-gate, and how they were received there 50
- CHAP. V.—How the heroes of Communipaw returned somewhat wiser than they went—and how the sage Oloffe dreamed a dream—and the dream that he dreamed 58
- CHAP. VI.—Containing an attempt at etymology—and of the founding of the great city of New-Amsterdam 61
- CHAP. VII.—How the people of Pavoia migrated from Communipaw to the island of Mamma-hatu—and how Oloffe the Dreamer proved himself a great Land spender 63
- CHAP. VIII.—Of the founding and naming of the new city—of the city arms—and of the direful feud between Ten Breeces and Tough Breeces 65
- CHAP. IX.—How the city of New-Amsterdam waxed great under the protection of St. Nicholas, and the absence of laws and statutes—how Oloffe the Dreamer began to dream of an extension of empire, and of the effect of his dreams 69

BOOK III.

IN WHICH IS RECORDED THE GOLDEN REIGN OF WOUTER VAN TWILLER.

- CHAP. I.—Of the renowned Wouter Van Twiller, his unparalleled virtues—as likewise his unutterable wisdom in the law case of Wandle Schoonhoven and Barent Bloecker—and the great admiration of the public therent 73
- CHAP. II.—Containing some account of the grand council of New-Amsterdam, as also divers especial good philosophical reasons why an ableman should be fat—with other particulars touching the state of the province 79
- CHAP. III.—How the town of New-Amsterdam arose out of mud, and came to be marvellously polished and polite—together with a picture of the manners of our great-great-grandfathers 86
- CHAP. IV.—Containing further particulars of the golden age, and what constituted a fine lady and gentleness in the days of Walter the Doubter 91
- CHAP. V.—Of the founding of Fort Aurinda—of the mysteries of the Hudson—of the arrival of the Patron Killian Van Renselaer; his horrid descent upon the earth, and his introduction of club law . . . 95
- CHAP. VI.—In which the reader is beguiled into a delectable walk, which ends very differently from what it commenced 97
- CHAP. VII.—Faithfully describing the ingenious people of Connecticut and therabouts—showing, moreover, the true meaning of liberty of conscience, and a curious device among these sturdy barbarians, to keep up a harmony of intercourse, and promote population . . . 101
- CHAP. VIII.—How these singular barbarians turned out to be notorious squatters—how they built air castles, and attempted to initiate the Nederlanders in the mystery of bandling 105

- CHAP. IX.—How the Fort Goed Hoop was fearfully beleaguered—how the renowned Wouter fell into a profound doubt, and how he finally evaporated Page 108

BOOK IV.

CONTAINING THE CHRONICLES OF THE REIGN OF WILLIAM THE TESTY.

- CHAP. I.—Showing the nature of history in general; containing furthermore the universal acquirements of William the Testy, and how a man may learn so much as to render himself good for nothing . . . 113
- CHAP. II.—How William the Testy undertook to conquer by proclamation—how he was a great man abroad, but a little man in his own house 116
- CHAP. III.—In which are recorded the sage projects of a ruler of universal genius—the art of fighting by proclamation—and how that the valiant Jacobus Van Carlet came to be foully dishonoured at Fort Goed Hoop 119
- CHAP. IV.—Containing the fearful wrath of William the Testy, and the alarm of New-Amsterdam—how the governor did strongly fortify the city—of Antony the Trumpeter, and the windy addition to the armorial bearings of New-Amsterdam 122
- CHAP. V.—Of the jurisprudence of William the Testy, and his admirable expedients for the suppression of poverty 125
- CHAP. VI.—Projects of William the Testy for increasing the currency—he is outwitted by the Yankees—The great oyster war . . . 128
- CHAP. VII.—Growing discontents of New-Amsterdam under the government of William the Testy 131
- CHAP. VIII.—The edict of William the Testy against tobacco—of the pipe plot, and the rise of feuds and parties 135
- CHAP. IX.—Of the folly of being happy in the time of prosperity—of troubles to the south brought on by annexation—of the secret expedition of Jansen Alpendam, and his magnificent reward . . . 136
- CHAP. X.—Troublesome times on the Hudson—how Kilian Van Rensselaer erected a feudal castle, and how he introduced club law into the province 139
- CHAP. XI.—Of the diplomatic mission of Antony the Trumpeter to the Fortress of Rensselaerstein—and how he was puzzled by a cabalistic reply 141
- CHAP. XII.—Containing the rise of the great Amphictyonic Council of the pilgrims, with the decline and final extinction of William the Testy 144

BOOK V.

CONTAINING THE FIRST PART OF THE REIGN OF PETER STUYVESANT, AND HIS TROUBLES WITH THE AMPHICTYONIC COUNCIL.

- CHAP. I.—In which the death of a great man is shown to be no very inconsolable matter of sorrow—and how Peter Stuyvesant acquired a great name from the uncommon strength of his head 148

- CHAP. II.—Showing how Peter the Headstrong bestirred himself among the rats and cobwebs on entering into office; his interview with Antony the Trumpeter, and his perilous meddling with the currency . . . Page 153
- CHAP. III.—How the Yankee league waxed more and more potent—and how it outwitted the good Peter in treaty-making . . . 156
- CHAP. IV.—Containing divers speculations, showing that a treaty of peace is a great national evil . . . 160
- CHAP. V.—How Peter Stuyvesant was grievously belied by the great council of the league—and how he sent Antony the Trumpeter to take to the council a piece of his mind . . . 163
- CHAP. VI.—How Peter Stuyvesant demanded a court of honour—and of the court of honour awarded to him . . . 168
- CHAP. VII.—How “drum ecclesiastic” was beaten throughout Connecticut for a crusade against the New-Netherlands—and how Peter Stuyvesant took measures to fortify his capital . . . 169
- CHAP. VIII.—How the Yankee crusade against the New-Netherlands was baffled by the sudden outbreak of witchcraft among the people of the east . . . 173
- CHAP. IX.—Which records the rise and renown of a military commander, showing that a man, like a bladder, may be puffed up to greatness by mere wind; together with the catastrophe of a veteran and his queen . . . 176

BOOK VI.

CONTAINING THE SECOND PART OF THE REIGN OF PETER THE HEAD-STRONG, AND HIS GALLANT ACHIEVEMENTS ON THE DELAWARE.

- CHAP. I.—In which is exhibited a warlike portrait of the great Peter—of the windy contest of General Van Poffenburgh and General Printz, and of the Musquito war on the Delaware . . . 182
- CHAP. II.—Of Jan Risingh, his giantly person and crafty deeds—and of the catastrophe at Fort Casimir . . . 186
- CHAP. III.—Showing how profound secrets are often brought to light; with the proceedings of Peter the Headstrong when he heard of the misfortunes of General Van Poffenburgh . . . 191
- CHAP. IV.—Containing Peter Stuyvesant’s voyage up the Hudson, and the wonders and delights of that renowned river . . . 196
- CHAP. V.—Describing the powerful army that assembled at the city of New-Amsterdam, together with the interview between Peter the Headstrong and General Van Poffenburgh, and Peter’s sentiments touching unfortunate great men . . . 201
- CHAP. VI.—In which the author discourses very ingeniously of himself; after which is to be found much interesting history about Peter the Headstrong and his followers . . . 206
- CHAP. VII.—Showing the great advantage that the author has over his reader in time of battle; together with divers portentous movements, which betoken that something terrible is about to happen . . . 213
- CHAP. VIII.—Containing the most horrible battle ever recorded in poetry or prose; with the admirable exploits of Peter the Headstrong . . . 217

- CHAP. IX.—In which the author and the reader, while reposing after the battle, fall into a very grave discourse, after which is recorded the conduct of Peter Stuyvesant after his victory Page 225

BOOK VII.

CONTAINING THE THIRD PART OF THE REIGN OF PETER THE HEAD-STRONG; HIS TROUBLES WITH THE BRITISH NATION, AND THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE DUTCH DYNASTY.

- CHAP. I.—How Peter Stuyvesant relieved the sovereign people from the burthen of taking care of the nation; with sundry particulars of his conduct in the time of peace, and of the rise of a great Dutch aristocracy 232
- CHAP. II.—How Peter Stuyvesant endeavored to civilise the community—how he was a great promoter of holidays—how he instituted kissing on New-Year's Day—how he distributed tickles throughout the New-Netherlands—how he ventured to reform the ladies' petticoats, and how he caught a Tartar 237
- CHAP. III.—How troubles thicken on the province—how it is threatened by the Helderbergers, the Merrylanders, and the giants of the Sasquehanna 240
- CHAP. IV.—How Peter Stuyvesant adventured into the East Country, and how he fared there 242
- CHAP. V.—How the Yankees secretly sought the aid of the British Cabinet in their hostile schemes against the Manhattoes 247
- CHAP. VI.—Of Peter Stuyvesant's expedition into the East Country, showing that, though an old bird, he did not understand trap . . . 248
- CHAP. VII.—How the people of New-Amsterdam were thrown into a great panic, by the news of the threatened invasion, and the manner in which they fortified themselves 252
- CHAP. VIII.—How the Grand Council of the New-Netherlands were miraculously gifted with long tongues in the moment of emergency; showing the value of words in warfare 254
- CHAP. IX.—In which the troubles of New-Amsterdam appear to thicken; showing the bravery, in time of peril, of a people who defend themselves by resolutions 257
- CHAP. X.—Containing a doleful disaster of Antony the Trumpeter; and how Peter Stuyvesant, like a second Cromwell, suddenly dissolved a Rump Parliament 263
- CHAP. XI.—How Peter Stuyvesant defended the city of New-Amsterdam for several days, by dint of the strength of his head 267
- CHAP. XII.—Containing the dignified retirement, and mortal surrender of Peter the Headstrong 272
- CHAP. XIII.—The author's reflections upon what has been said . . . 277
