PREFACE

IT is scarcely necessary to write even the shortest preface, for I think that the following pages explain themselves. Many people may say that there is no excuse for writing another book about South Africa, but it must be remembered that it is a country in the making, and, as such, is in a state of constant change: for this reason it always provides something new for the traveller to record.

My thanks are due to Colonel Frank Rhodes for some of the photographs, and for the exceptional opportunities of acquiring information which I enjoyed in his company last year.

I visited all the different places mentioned here with him, and was enabled to see more of the country, and to learn more about its problems, than would have been possible for one travelling under the ordinary conditions.
