PREFACE

TWO of Mr. Atkinson's superiors, both in years and in-office, suggested the writing of this book. They found in his friendship such dash and charm, such power and help, that they wished more people to know him; they believed, too, that he had methods of work worthy of record.

Many who knew and loved the man have come to my aid. Did I not know that they prefer less public recognition, I should say over their names. They know that I thank them, and they will see for themselves how much the book owes to their kindness.

Mr. Atkinson loved frankness; therefore the book discloses, so far as his friends knew it, his inner life. But we shall all agree that the best has not been told.
