THE GOLDEN PRIME.

CHAPTER I.

MRS. RAWDON TRIUMPHS.

THE most futile of questions, when a man has a bullet in his body, is to ask how that foreign substance got there. It may be taken for granted that an instrument or engine has been discharged with accurate aim. I might make a chapter here about the duel; but my fear is that three volumes will not give me space enough for the story I have to tell. Not without difficulty was the encounter brought off. Whilst ground was being measured, near the small town of Rodange, up came the
