PREFACE.

A few explanatory statements will suffice for a Proem to this small volume. In its preparation I have sought to utilize some of my literary work which has already received the recognition of "print and pay" in the Southern Methodist Quarterly Review, under the distinguished editorship of Dr. W. P. Harrison, who is in some directions the most scholarly man of his church. Other material has been gathered from my contributions to the columns of standard literary and religious magazines and journals. A very considerable part of it, however, is now published for the first time. I am greatly indebted to the appreciation of many personal friends who will take the larger part of the present edition. I wish also to tender my acknowledgments to Mrs. Mary Lanier, of Baltimore, and Charles Scribner's Sons, of New York, for the permission granted me to append to my first lecture some of the choicest poems of the lamented Sidney Lanier. My readers, I am sure, will also appreciate their kindness.

I can hardly say that he sought my acquaintance, and I am sure that I did not seek his; for as yet I was ignorant of his literary antecedents, and I doubt if he himself had so much as dreamed of his own literary possibilities.

After the lapse of so many eventful years I can not be exact as to the date of our first interview; but I have a clear impression that it was in the early summer of 1867, at Montgomery Hall, in the capital city of Alabama. Having entered the hotel—not without the proverbial welcome of "mine host"—I wrote my name and residence on the register and took my seat in the rotunda for a slight rest and recuperation. It was but a little while until I was approached by a pleasant-faced young gentleman who quietly asked if I was the editor of Scott's Magazine. I replied affirmatively, whereupon he was kind enough to say that he had read the Magazine, and liked it. In answer to an inquiry he informed me that he was a native of Macon, Ga., a son of Robert S. Lanier, Esq., and grandson of Sterling Lanier, two excellent citizens of that central city. Learning that I
