THE BOOK OF DENE, DEANE, ADEANE.

A Genealogical History.

BY MARY DEANE.

LONDON:
ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.
1899.

Preface. 1145851

THIS genealogical history owes its existence to long years of patient research on the part of Mr. J. Bathurst Deane, but the loss of his sight precluded his making his voluminous notes into a complete book.

My only substitute for the finished scholarship and the prestige of a well-known antiquary has been diligence, which would have attained to small result had it not been for the generosity of Mr. William Dean (of the Holdenhurst family), who placed at my disposal the whole of his large collection of extracts from wills & State Papers, & I desire to record here my great obligation to him.

I offer my thanks also to my kinsfolk both near & distant, whose cordial concurrence has enabled me to save my father's work from the oblivion of faded manuscript, & beg their indulgence for the unavoidable imperfections—& even for any avoidable ones—they may discover.

There is yet scope for some future genealogist of our wide clan in a search after those links which are lost in the years succeeding the dissolution of monasteries—the dark age of the archaeologist—& I hope that one will arise who may prove exactly where each flourishing branch diverged from the parent stock, & possibly, the unity of the two stocks of Dene.

As one of a family representing both those stocks, I have the pleasure & advantage of a claim of kindred, back even to a shadowy past, with all who are derived from them, & this has added pleasantness to the work I have now finished, & beg to dedicate to my subscribers.

MARY DEANE.
