THE following small work, the product of occasional hours of leisure, was compiled in the first instance without any especial view to publication. St Leonard's Ward having frequently been prominently before the public, and being also rich in antiquities not yet concisely treated of, the author has been induced to submit to the world the result of his researches.

The author lays no claim to erudition; but the facts stated will, he believes, be found trustworthy; what he submits will not, he hopes, be found destitute of interest.

Various gentlemen have kindly aided the author with information or suggestions, and occasional revisions for the press. To particularize would be invidious, but the author takes this opportunity of tendering to these gentlemen his thanks.
