PREFACE.

THE object of this volume is to place on record events in the history of Englewood for the last forty years, also to keep in memory those who were its pioneers and founders.

The writer entered upon this duty with reluctance, as he would have much preferred to have left it to other hands more capable than his.

Realizing that the annals of this city should be written by one familiar with its affairs from the beginning, and not knowing how long that one may be permitted to remain, is the writer's apology for attempting the task.

It is written mostly from memory, as very few of the incidents are on record.

It is not intended to narrate the history of men and affairs of to-day, except as they form links in the chain of beings that extends back into years that have past.

The author has not intended to give a detailed history of societies and institutions, but to notice them in a general way.

He asks the reader to be kind in his criticisms, and tread gently over the imperfections of this little work.
