PREFATORY NOTE

THE issue of this little volume may be taken as the fulfilment of a task undertaken to preserve the memory of a pioneer in the early religious life and economic activities of the Eastern Townships. The work is to be sold, for the most part, by subscription; and whatever profit may be realized from the sales, after the printer is paid, will be placed in the hands of Mr. Chapman's two daughters, to be made use of as they deem best for themselves. Good Cheer Lodge, as their abode is called, was left to them by their revered father; and, these memoirs, virtually emanating from that home, so redolent with the memories of "The Grand Old Man of Dudswell", as he is called on the title page, may recommend themselves to the people of the Townships, not from any literary merit they possess, but from the desire embodied in them of preserving for posterity the story of a good man's life.
