PREFACE

Many years have passed since the artists of the Renaissance period painted the pictures which made them famous, but, because of their greatness of soul and clearness of vision, their works contain the precious qualities which will make them endure for all time.

The man is always greater than his work, for its conception must exist within his own soul before he can picture it. So I have written simple stories of the lives of three of these artists, with descriptions of their most wonderful paintings, that the children may learn to know them.

Acknowledgment is made to Charles Scribner's Sons and Dr. Henry Van Dyke for their kindness in allowing the use of copyright matter. The selections from Longfellow, Whittier, Celia Thaxter, and W. W. Story are used by permission of and by special arrangement with Houghton, Mifflin & Co., publishers of their works.

The picture of the tomb of Julius is reproduced by permission of Fratelli Alinari, Florence.
