DEDICATION.

To the medium for and of the Star Circle, W. W. Aber, I dedicate this little poem.

Oft as I stand on this fair border land,
 And gaze from this world to that earth of yours,
 I wonder that men cannot understand,
 Less of the dross of earth and of the spirit more!

And when mine eyes have looked on those vast throngs,
 That only move but for earth's greed and gain,
 Whose ears have never caught the seraph's song,
 All at last find they have lived in vain,

Until when Heaven's veil is torn aside,
 And they full well know sweet new life in death,
 When all is gone that was their joy and pride;
 And they are taught to draw immortal breath;

I wonder not their hearts do almost break,
 When o'er the darkened past their sad eyes look,
 And know that they have given all for vain greed's sake;
 The paths of love and duty they forsook!

Oft when I meet the longings of some hungry heart,
 Who has so sadly failed on earth to find the way,
 And try with all my spirit light to impart,
 So they may find at last, Eternal Day!

I know such hearts but weep sad bitter tears,
At thought of the dear chances they have lost;
To find the truth in those dead by-gone years,
And learn at last of ignorance the cost!

And so I plead with mortals of the earth,
To give heed to the instruments we send
Into your midst to give your souls new birth,
To be to you a blessed guidance, angel, friend!

Here we have given you a type of man,
Who carries depths that only we can know,
A mystic that men fail to understand,
But that if sought could rid your world of woe!

Be careful of the prize we have but lent,
For we shall claim him back again some time;
For sensitives of earth are Heaven-sent,
To let you know of this sweet love-fraught clime!

Children of earth seek more, and yet still more!
Through our dear psychics whom we freely give,
Gaze on the opening of the Heavenly Door,
Look past the eyes of Death and live!

PREFACE

There is no system of religion or philosophy, no new theory or science that Spiritualism does not embrace.

It has obtained a foothold among men that no other religion or science has been able to reach in regard to a future life. Like other reformations we have and are building such powerful auxiliaries to the success and growth of Spiritualism that no force can disturb its progress. We hope to make this work plain and comprehensive to its readers. All of this and much more is now easily to be learned by any one who will investigate and study the constantly increasing literature of Spiritualism at the present day.

The short, terse paragraphs and independent sentences contained in the three books, Rending the Veil, Beyond the Veil, and the Guiding Star, have given food to the hungry soul.

This book will be entirely written by us, different than the other three books, being fully satisfied that the thoughts and expressions contained in this book will richly repay for the time consumed in their study, and that they will throw much needed light in what Spiritualism is, and what Spiritualists believe; this book is herewith presented to the public.
