FOREWORD.

THE following four sermons were preached in a series by the writer on successive Sunday evenings during a revival in his church, the attempt being to set forth in popular form the plan of man's salvation as presented in the Scriptures, and, most explicitly, by the first great theologian of the Church, the inspired apostle, in his Epistle to the Romans.

It is believed, if one will read the Epistle to the Romans with the aid of these sermons, he will the more perfectly understand the teaching of that comprehensive writing, and the more fully comprehend the only "name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."

We have written the sermons out in the present form with the hope that they may be helpful to pastors, evangelists, and Christian teachers and workers in general.

We think they will not be profitless reading for the intelligent and earnest layman.

The size of the volume is quite well suited to this electric age, and if the theme is "meat" for
