PREFACE.

O one seems to think a book complete without a Preface, and though this humble Collection of Verses scarcely seems to need any formal introduction to that narrow circle which will probably supply the majority of its readers, we cannot neglect the opportunity of thanking those who have allowed us to make use of their compositions. Prominent among these is the name of F. W. Bourdillon, under whose various signatures a large portion of the following selection first appeared.

This debt of gratitude being discharged, we have only to apologise for attempting that which we have attempted, and to hope that our efforts may meet with the approval of those who shall take up this result of our thoughts and labours.

SURSUM CORDA.

THERE lives within the breast of all
A secret half-unknown desire,
That bids us fly to face the fire,
And rush to greet the battle-call;

Which ever says, 'Tis better far
To strive and struggle e'en to death,
Than to give up a peaceful breath
That ne'er has quickened at the war.

So in the spring of boyhood's years
High beats the heart for noble things,
Nor ever there ambition clings
Less daring than to touch the spheres.

Then comes the cold world's withering scorn,
That bids us Look before we leap,
And only shews the hill is steep,
Not, On the height begins the morn.
