PREFACE.

THE collection of Coins, of which the following is a Catalogue, having been for many years unarranged, and almost unknown, in the College Library, I undertook the task of arranging them, at the direction of the heads of the College ; and, although wholly inexperienced in such matters, I did so the more readily, hoping that it might excite in the College some inquiry, at least, about a study too generally neglected, and almost despised, but which, from the light it throws on history, as well as its intrinsic interest, is well qualified to engage the attention of literary men.

There is, also, a large number of Roman brass Coins, and from three to four hundred Greek silver, but in a state of complete confusion. There are many gaps too, as appears, in the present Catalogue ; and it is not unlikely that I may have ignorantly inserted some spurious coins, as I had only my own judgment to depend on.

If any experienced numismatist would be kind enough to forward any advice that might facilitate the object of rendering our collection more complete, it would be received with the greatest thankfulness.
