CHAPTER I.

CALL IT NOT PROVINCIAL!

ON the first of November, just ten years ago, the great world of Guildford had all come back to town. Veritable metropolitans, of recent wealth and eminence, may smile at the notion that so unimportant a place can have a great world at all; but all who are well versed in the social traditions of this country understand perfectly the import of the phrase "one of the best families of Guildford." I am in a position to introduce my reader to the best families, but it must of course depend somewhat upon himself whether he makes his way among them.
