EXPLANATORY NOTE

This volume on the government ownership of the telegraph and telephone, like others of this series of Debaters' Handbooks, is primarily for students and debaters; yet libraries wishing a selected bibliography of reasonable length, as well as reprints of recent articles, will find it of use. As explained in the Introduction, statistics prior to 1907, and the arguments based upon them, are so out of date that they have been included to only a very slight extent.

The present service of the telegraph and telephone systems is fully described under the heading General Discussion, where articles discussing government ownership from all points of view are reprinted. Other articles arguing definitely for the affirmative or negative have been placed under those respective headings, and arranged in logical rather than alphabetical order. So far as possible, the two sides have been balanced as carefully as possible.

As is customary in this series, the selections in the reprints are given but in part, omissions not being indicated. Yet in no case has the omission included any sentence or paragraph which would misrepresent the point of view of the author, or invalidate the honesty of the quotation given.
