" Our sparkfull youth laugh at their great grandfathers' English, who had more care to do well, than to speak minion like, and left more glory to us by their exploiting of great acts than we shall do by our forging anew words and unceuth phrases.

PREFACE.

"THE etymologist," says Cornelius Agrippa in the preface to his remarkable work on "The vanity of the arts and sciences," in which he anticipates the resentment of their various professors—" the etymologist will derive my name from the gout!"*

Bearing this bitter sarcasm in lively remembrance, I trust I have not gone too far for derivations in the list of provincial words which follows, and that my anxiety to prove them will not provoke the censure or the ridicule of the critic and the scholar.

Having, in my boyhood, resided in a district of North Wiltshire remote from large towns, I became acquainted with many—I may say nearly all—the provincialisms in use by the rural population; and the cares and anxieties of later life have not been sufficient to efface them from my memory : but, great was my astonishment and delight, when, on my first acquaintance with Anglo-Saxon literature, I discovered that what for many generations past has been considered a barbarous and vulgar jargon, was once the language of Bede, of Alfred, and of Aelfric !

* Etymologiis suis Agrippa nomen indent podagricum.

This will scarcely be credited by persons less familiar than myself with these provincialisms ; but, I am persuaded that any doubt they may entertain, will be dispelled on comparing the words in the list with those of similar signification in the Anglo-Saxon language. Some of these derivations are palpable and indisputable, while many words are retained to this hour as they originally existed.

Every educated man knows that the basis of our language is the Anglo-Saxon ; but, it may be questioned whether many persons are aware of the existence of so many primitive Anglo-Saxon words in the dialects of the West of England.

The phrase "Dialects of the West of England," will be well understood by those who have made provincialisms their study. They will not require to be told, that this dialect, with its modifications, prevails among the rural population of the counties of Devon, Dorset, Somerset, Hants, Wilts, Berks, Hereford, part of Warwick, and even Surrey, Sussex, and Kent; and that there are a few words which alone will suffice to identify a native of those counties, and distinguish him from a native of the more Northern provinces. The title, master, will suffice. In the West this word is pronounced measter, or maester; but in the North maister, mūster or mūsther. On the other hand, there are certain words which are occasionally pronounced the same, in nearly every part of England. Among these are Coom for Come.

 Lang — Long.
 Fram — From.
 Mon — Man.
 Crud — Curd.

The only difference is, that in the north of England these words are invariably thus pronounced, while in the west, the pronunciation differs sometimes even in the same village.

Similar variations may be discovered in Saxon writings, where in the same page come is spelt cym, cum, and cûm, an irregularity which leads to the inference that the word was pronounced differently, and that the scribe was perplexed by it.

There is another fact which denotes the common origin of the English Language, much as the dialects differ in many respects. This consists in the transposition of vowel and consonant, or rather in the retention of the ancient orthography. Thus we find in the West of England,

Hapse for Hasp.
 Wapse — Wasp.
 Thurgh— Through.
 Girt — Great.
 Claps — Clasp.

While in the North of England we have

Crud for Curd.
 Brid — Bird.

and several others.

There is a peculiarity in the dialects of the West of England, which deserves especial notice: this is the sound of the diphthong oi as wi. Thus spwile, for spoil. The w is also often sounded before a vowel, as stwone, for stone; twoad for toad, &c.: while the o is
