INTRODUCTION.

VISITED Japan last year, and shortly after my return was invited to deliver a lecture for the benefit of a Medical Mission, with which request I complied, and being subsequently asked to publish it, I have so far acquiesced by printing a few copies for private circulation to which I have added notes of my journey across America, and am indebted to "Murray," "Baedeker," "Knapp," and other authorities for some of my information—the marginal numbers which refer to the lantern slides exhibited during the lecture, will be readily understood. In its present form it was delivered as one of the Saturday Afternoon Lectures arranged by the Literary and Philosophical Society, at the Royal Institution, Hull, on the 6th January, 1900.

1—THE NORTHERN HEMISPHERE.

This Sketch Map of the Northern Hemisphere shows the course of my journey (indicated by the dotted line) from England by the Eastward route to Japan, returning by America and thus making the circuit of the world.
