P R E F A C E.

THE chief theme of this little book is, Man himself as he came from his Maker's hands, and Man as he made himself by his disobedience and fall. The discussion thus necessarily extends to such grave questions as sin's nature, origin, and effects upon our first parents and the race; and our effort takes somewhat the character of a Theodicy. Writing principally for the people, we have done our best to keep our pages unencumbered with the technical language of theology, and would gladly have omitted the polemical element altogether if that had been suitable to our circumstances. Our desire has been to write with such simplicity and love as are consistent with fidelity to the truth. Perhaps it is too much to hope that we may give instruction to all readers, offence to none.
