"WHAT I find it hard to understand is, why a person who can see a spray of fringed gentian in the middle of a meadow can't see a book on the sitting-room table."

"The reason why I can see the gentian," said Jonathan, "is because the gentian is there."

"So is the book," I responded.

"Which table?" he asked.

"The one with the lamp on it. It's a red book, about so big."

"It is n't there; but, just to satisfy you, I'll look again."

He returned in a moment with an argumentative expression of countenance. "It is n't there," he said firmly. "Will anything else do instead?"
